[Music]

What do you remember about your first ultrasound?

Oh gosh. Well, it was super exciting because we were waiting a really long time before we had Blake.

Purposely waiting a long time or –

Yeah. I think we just wanted to feel comfortable. And when we decided to have him [snaps fingers], it happened just like that, thank God.

Thank God. Yeah.

And I just know that we just felt so much excitement and beauty and energy about the experience.

Did the doctor say, the person conducting the ultrasound, say immediately, yes, we see ten toes, ten fingers, the whole thing? Did he go through any of that?

Well, we –

Or did you ask for the gender?

So, I did not want to know --

I didn't either.

-- the sex of the baby. My husband did. But that means we don't learn it because I didn't want to know it.

I didn't want to know either. Why didn't you want to know?

For centuries people didn't find out what they were having until it came out. So just why not, you know? I just didn't feel the need to. I just wanted to be surprised.

Me too. I wanted to be surprised.

Yeah.

And I didn't care --

Yeah.

-- whether it was a boy or a girl. My husband found out on the sly.

He did?

With all three. I didn't know until after my third child was born. He said, I knew every one. Very clever.

That's so funny.

Yeah. Yeah, yeah, yeah.

My husband didn't do that.

Well, your husband is a good guy. [Laughing] My husband's a good guy too.
