

When a woman becomes pregnant, she's super excited to see her baby for the first time. But it can take awhile for a lot of the structures to develop.

So for the first time, all you're going to see is a crown-lump plank that will look just like a little fetal pole.

And a lot of times people want to know, when can I find out the sex of the baby?

We found out, what, about 15 weeks I would say that we were having a girl.

I have no regrets. I think we'll probably find out a bit before for all of them.

Right. It was nice to be able to call her a her or a she throughout the process even if we didn't have a name for her yet.

Could plan a little bit more.

Exactly, rather than it or baby.

Right.

So ultrasounds can typically detect gender between 16 and 20 weeks. But it's important to have your ultrasound closer to 20 weeks so we can get a really good look at the baby's anatomy and make sure everything's okay.

And if you choose to do genetic screening for other reasons, there is a possibility to detect the gender slightly earlier than that.
